Weekly Legislative Feature Issues:

The Business of Governing Begins

After a tumultuous week of moving and internal restructuring, the 2017 Legislative Session continues to progress. Last Friday, January 13, 2017 at 5:00 PM was the deadline for proposed bills to be submitted by individual legislators. Moving forward, the committees are currently meeting to raise concepts and to vote to draft bills as committee bills. In the coming weeks, public hearings on these bills will begin.

The past week has revealed new developments of particular interest to you:

Governor Malloy affirmed his commitment to finding a solution to the continuing problem of crumbling foundations that is plaguing Connecticut homeowners.

“Malloy told a group of small town officials Wednesday that he’s working on coming up with a program to test homes. He said once the scope of the problem is known then the state can try again to get help from the Federal Emergency Management Agency.”

State Representative Henry Genga, D-East Hartford, has submitted a bill that would bring electronic tolls to an unspecified number of highways.

Gov. Dannel P. Malloy, despite proposing to spend $100 billion over 30 years to improve the state’s roads, rails and bridges, has not embraced tolls as a way of paying for his initiative. The governor last week said he will not call for highway tolls in his upcoming budget, and added it would take up to four years to install tolls.

State Senator Toni Boucher, Senate Republican Chair of the Transportation Committee opposes tolls stating, “it’s the worst possible time right now” to implement tolling.

Legislators are looking to fix education funding in Connecticut.

the Connecticut Coalition for Achievement Now, an education advocacy group, Wednesday at Hamden Middle School.

Rep. Michael D’Agostino, D-Hamden, remarked that a major flaw in the original formula is its focus on overall per capita wealth. Instead he advocated a future model that emphasizes the student population and a municipality’s financial ability to contribute to local education.

“Instead of just looking at the free and reduced-price lunch population, you look at how many families are on SNAP, how many on government assistance, how many students are characterized as homeless, how many are special education, how many are (English language learners); you look at those metrics of a school system, and second should be town ability to pay, not per capita income. Things like the grand list. Also the mill rate,” [D’Agostino] said.
