CT fastrak Celebrates Its Second Year as New Transit-Oriented Development Begins Construction

After Two Years of Service, CT fastrak is Exceeding Ridership Targets and Fostering Economic Growth in Surrounding Communities

Hartford, Connecticut – Governor Dannel Malloy, along with other public officials and local advocates, gathered on Tuesday to celebrate the second anniversary of CT fastrak. The bus rapid transit system has already seen more than five million riders, and the service continues to exceed ridership projections. Capitol Region Council of Governments (CRCOG) Executive Director Lyle Wray, Mayor Shari Cantor of West Hartford, and Connecticut Department of Transportation (CTDOT) Public Transit Administrator Michael Sanders were among those to speak positively about CT fastrak and its impact on the regional economy.

The event was held at the future site of 616 New Park, a $20 million mixed-use, transit-oriented development (TOD) project on New Park Avenue in West Hartford. The development is adjacent to the Elmwood CT fastrak station and will provide 54 units of housing, including eleven units of supportive housing for veterans. Many of the day's speakers stated that without CT fastrak, developments like 616 New Park would not be possible. The bus rapid transit service has brought increased economic activity to the corridor, and businesses along corridors like New Park Avenue have seen an increase in customers.

CRCOG Executive Director Lyle Wray, who has long been a supporter of CT fastrak and its effects on the regional economy, said that 616 New Park and similar construction in New Britain are only the beginning of the TOD that CT fastrak will bring. "If we are going to attract the next generation of skilled workers,

A voluntary Council of Governments formed to initiate and implement regional programs of benefit to the towns and the region

these are the kinds of assets we need to have," Wray said. He stressed the importance of TOD in retaining young professionals, which is a target market for 616 New Park.

The event concluded with officials leaving their handprints in a slab of concrete that will become part of the foundation for 616 New Park. Construction on the project is expected to be completed in June of 2018.
